

This year Faurecia celebrate 25 years in China. The company have developed their activities in China while the country expanded to become the world's largest automotive market. Since first producing in China in 1994, Faurecia's China operations have now developed into a leading automotive equipment supplier with advanced technology solutions across four product ranges, employing more than 20,000 people in 4 R&D centres and 70 factories across the country. China has become a key area of focus for Faurecia not just because it's now the world's largest automotive market, but also because today it is taking the lead in the rapid evolution towards next-generation connected cars, new energy vehicles, and future mobility services.